The Beatitudes

Part - 2

Blessed are the poor in spirit;
for theirs is the kingdom of heaven.
Blessed are they that mourn;
for they shall be comforted.
Blessed are the meek;
for they shall inherit the earth.
Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness;
for they shall be filled.
Blessed are the merciful;
for they shall obtain mercy.
Blessed are the pure in heart;
for they shall see God.
Blessed are the peacemakers;
for they shall be called the children of God.
Blessed are they which are persecuted
for righteousness' sake;
for theirs is the kingdom of heaven.
Blessed are ye, when men shall revile you,
and persecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely, for my sake.

A Word from the Pastor

Dearly beloved,

Greetings to you in the most precious name of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. In continuation of last months' meditation, we shall concentrate on the remaining beatitudes this month. From our childhood, we have learnt and memorised the 'Beatitudes'. But, how much attention have we given to the final five. For that matter, the whole of the 'sermon on the mount' is very important to meditate upon.

According to the gospel of Mathew, Jesus started his preaching about the kingdom of God (Mt 5-7 chapters). He was not like the previous prophets and religious leaders. He was the expected messiah and his preaching was according to the kingdom of God, which was to be established through him.

Firstly, through the Beatitudes, he brought us the reality of discipleship. Our pastor, Rev. P. Royappa has already explained to us the meaning of the Beatitudes in last months' pastoral letter. Jesus invited the common man to understand the 'kingdom of God'. To be a serious follower, ready to pay the price of discipleship.

Secondly, the 'sermon on the mount' was no more based on the spirit of Mosaic law, but on the Messianic law. Jesus said, "you have heard that it was said.... regarding murder, adultery, divorce, oaths, eye for an eye, hating your enemies, but I say....do not be angry, do not commit adultery, cause of divorce and its effects, do not swear an oath, do not pay evil to evil and love thy enemy". It completely changed the idea of the 'Law of Moses'. Rules for the kingdom of God were initiated by the messiah himself.

Thirdly, the 'sermon on the mount' was a new beginning for the people, to pray collectively to the heavenly father. He also taught us how to fast. One should have proper motives for fasting and offering gifts.

Fourthly, he taught us about the treasures in heaven. "Do not store up for yourselves treasures on earth, where moth and rust destroy, and where thieves break and steal. But store up for yourselves treasures in heaven,.... for where your treasure is, there your heart will also be" (Mt. 6:19-21). Jesus clearly called us to have an attitude concerning the use of money, so that our actions point towards his calling. He also advised us to avoid all worry.

Finally, he warned us about false teachers. Ones who interpret the law of Moses according to their convenience. The spirit of the law is broken. Those who teach the law will not follow it, but expect others to do so. Jesus exposed the dangers of false prophets and their hypocrisy.

He concludes his 'sermon on the mount' by narrating a parable. " Therefore, everyone who hears these words of mine and puts them into practice is like the wise man who built his house on the rock" (Mt 7:24). Because he had strong foundation, he could withstand any eventuality. " But everyone who hears these words of mine and does not put them into practice is like the foolish man who built his house on the sand, which could not withstand storm and wind" (Mt. 7:26). Because it was built on sand and there was no strong foundation.

Dearly beloved, we invite you to accept Jesus and make him your foundation. I wish this months' continued 'Beatitude' meditations, and the idea of the 'sermon on the mount' will build your christian faith in Christ. " Rejoice and be glad, because great is your reward in heaven, for in the same way they persecuted the prophets who were before you" (Mt. 5:12).

Wish you a blessed month in your spiritual journey.

May God bless you,

Rev. David Vijayakumar
Sr. Pastor, IMC.

Preacher's Biography

ALEXANDER MURDOCH MACKAY

Alexander Murdoch Mackay (1849-1890), missionary, son of Alexander Mackay, LL.D., free church minister of Rhynie, Aberdeenshire, [Scotland], was born in the Free Church Manse on 13 Oct. 1849. He was blessed with a godly upbringing in the midst of intellectual surroundings. Mr. Mackay's father was a man of great literary ability, and for fourteen years carefully carried on the daily instruction of his boy. At three years of age Alexander Mackay read the New Testament with ease. He was his father's constant companion in his walks; at ten years of age he had great skill in map-making, and wonderful dexterity in type-setting; and very accurate were the proof-sheets turned out from his little printing-press. Letters were frequently received at the Manse from Hugh Miller, Sir Roderick Murchison, and other eminent scholars, all of which were read and talked about in the family circle; and in these ways the boy's mind rapidly developed.

For years his mother had prayed that little Alexander might give his heart to the Lord and become a servant of the Master. It was through her death in 1865 that the great change in his life took place. Her boy could not be got home from Aberdeen in time to see his mother before she passed away. She gave her Bagster's Bible to the nurse with instructions to hand it to her son on his arrival, with a text of three words, the words of St. Paul, "Search the scriptures." This passage, which was specially marked in the Bible, became to him as a message from God; this parting injunction became a duty, always continued.

In the fall of 1867 Mackay entered the Free Church Training School for Teachers, in Edinburgh; and there he won the admiration of pupils and teachers by his scholarly ability for two years. He had developed a taste for mechanics at an early age, and purposed becoming an engineer. For three years he studied the necessary subjects in Edinburgh University, and gained a practical knowledge of engineering by spending his afternoons at the works of Messrs. Miller & Herbert, Leith. In the mornings he taught at George Watson's College.

In November 1873 he went to Germany to learn the language, and at once secured a good position as draughtsman in the Berlin Union Engineering Co. In his leisure he translated Lübsen's "Differential and Integral Calculus," and constructed an agricultural machine of his own invention, which obtained the first prize at the Breslau Exhibition. His ability led to his promotion to the position of chief of the locomotive department in the firm.

In May, 1874, Mackay became a boarding member in the family of Herr Hofprediger Baur, one of the ministers at the cathedral. In this cultured and pious home Mackay derived many advantages, and met once a week at the Bible readings, the élite of the Christian society of Berlin, who gave great interest to Mackay's later labors. Under Baur's influence the fascination of missionary life, which he had felt in his youth, was revived in him, and determining to go as a missionary to Madagascar, he began to study the Malagasy language.

In April 1875 he was an unsuccessful candidate for the Church Missionary Society's post of lay-superintendent for a settlement of liberated slaves near Mombasa. The firm with which Mackay worked at Berlin was dissolved in September 1875, and he became draughtsman in a similar firm at Kottbus, sixty miles south-east from Berlin.

When Mr. H. M. Stanley, the explorer, in a letter to the "Daily Telegraph" in 1875, challenged Christendom to send missionaries to Uganda, Mackay offered his services to the Church Missionary Society in the proposed mission to Victoria Nyanza. The offer was accepted on 26 Jan. 1876, and he returned to England in March. The Church Missionary Society determined to combine the industrial with the religious element, sanctioned the purchase of a light cedar boat for navigation, and also appropriated three hundred pounds for a portable engine and boiler to be fitted into a wooden boat to be built by the missionaries on the Nyanza. Finally an engine after Mackay's own design was built. On 27 April 1876, Mackay and four other missionaries set sail in the steamship Peshawur from Southampton.

Arriving at Zanzibar on 30 May, he began his preparations for the march to the interior, and after long delay, caused principally through sickness, the remnant of the company that had escaped massacre reached Uganda in November 1878. He was taken seriously ill, and was obliged to return to the coast, where he was instructed by the Church Missionary Society to delay starting for the interior until June, 1877. He employed the intervening time in sending a relief caravan to his brethren on the lake. There was no road to Uganda, so he built a good road from Mpwapwa, two hundred and thirty miles inland.

March, 1878, Mackay heard of the murder of Lieutenant Smith and Mr. O'Neill, his last two companions, who had reached the lake months before, and hurried with all speed to the scene of the disaster, the island of Ukerewe, hoping by friendly intervention to prevent further bloodshed.

June 13 he arrived at Kagei, and had his first glimpse of the great lake. With joy he realized that the worst part of his journey was over. Piled together in a hut, Mackay found much of the valuable property conveyed to this point by the first sections of the expedition, and left in charge of the natives. Heaped together lay boiler-shells and books, papers and piston-rods, steam-pipes and stationery, printers' types, saws, and garden-seed, tins of bacon and bags of clothes, portable forges and boiler fittings, here a cylinder, there its sole plate. After his great labor in repairs, Mackay, in spite of danger to himself, visited the Island Ukerewe, and with tactful courage made friends with the murderer of his two companions, King Lkonge.

After this visit Mackay was a victim of dysentery; but at length, joined by Mr. Wilson, and favored with a good breeze, he sailed in the Daisy for Uganda. Four days of fine sailing, and then they were wrecked. Eight weeks of hard labour saw the making a new boat out of the Daisy. Mackay finally reached Rubaga, the capital of Uganda on Nov. 6. Mtesa, the Kabaka (king of the country), welcomed him, and his real life-work began. Mackay formed a useful intimacy, largely through his knowledge of practical mechanics. Mtesa and his subjects were much interested by accounts of railways, electricity, astronomy and physiology.

Mtesa appeared very anxious to hear more about the Christian religion to which Stanley had introduced him, and every Sunday religious services were held at court. From the first, the Arabs who centered in Rubaga were jealous of Mackay, fearing his influence would overthrow the slave traffic, which brought them here as elsewhere in Africa. They used all means to turn Mtesa against the white man, the most potent of which were the rich presents, including fire-arms, presented to the king. The Roman Catholic missionaries, who came soon after his arrival confused Mtesa with their claims to the true religion, and instituted a cruel persecution against the Protestants.

In April, 1880, Mackay, finding his store of goods nearly exhausted by the thieving of Mtesa's chiefs, went to Uyui for supplies, and during this trip barely escaped being murdered by the natives. At this time Mtesa turned entirely away from the teachings which Mackay and his friends had labored for two years to inculcate, — two years of labor, poverty, danger, and often times threatened starvation; Mackay kept his comrades alive by the sale of articles made by himself in his workshop.

Besides teaching his pupils reading, writing, and arithmetic, Mackay gave them daily lessons in building and designing. He built a house for the mission party, which was a source of wonder to all, and caused Mtesa to ask instruction for the natives in wood and iron; and when Mackay asked a piece of ground to build huts, he at once gave him twenty acres. To the natives Mackay's most wonderful achievement was a cart painted red and blue, and drawn by oxen.

From time to time Mackay's great work was supplemented by co-laborers sent by the Church Missionary Society; and in March, 1881, his heart was delighted by the baptism of five converts by Mr. O'Flaherty. Early in 1883 Rev. E. C. Gordon and Mr. Wise joined Mackay; in May of the same year Rev. R. P. Ashe arrived, and the prospects of the Mission were most encouraging until October, 1884, when Mtesa died.

Mackay had a severe and protracted struggle with the king's son, Mwangi, who succeeded to the throne; he dreaded the progress of the Christian mission. A reign of blood and terror followed, beginning with the burning of two Christian lads, who met their death with songs of praise, and were the first martyrs to the faith in Uganda. Ashe and Mackay were prevented from leaving the court. In the months that followed, lives of missionaries and converts were in constant danger; still the gospel spread, and young men came daily to the mission house for translated copies.

In May, 1886, thirty of the missionaries' faithful converts were slowly burned alive. Mackay was now anxious to get out of the country, but was refused permission to leave. New missionaries with presents would have bought his escape; but he would not write for men to come to Uganda in the disturbed condition of affairs. He stayed on bravely, even after he had unselfishly obtained leave for Ashe to go.

Alone, weary in soul and body, his life in imminent danger, Mackay worked early and late in translating and printing the Scriptures. News of the Emin Pasha expedition reached the king; and warned by French priests, Mwanga decided that Mackay must leave Uganda. Arranging that Mr. Gordon should come to care for the converts, Mackay turned away from the country where he had spent nine eventful years - years of deep experiences, of toils and privations; years that had silvered his hair and calmed the restless impulses of his youth; but his watchword was unchanged - "Africa for Christ".

After much weary wandering, Mackay fell in with a friendly chief in the land of Usambiro; and here, single-handed and alone, he began the great work of a new mission station. A band of five men, headed by Bishop Parker, and including his old friend and fellow worker, Ashe, soon came to cheer his lonely life. A few happy weeks together — then Bishop Parker and Mr. Blackburn died of fever; Mr. Walker went to Uganda; Mr. Ashe was compelled to return home on account of bad health; Mackay was again alone.

And again this all-round missionary set himself to the work of teaching, translating, printing, binding, doctoring, and building; and in the midst of these many and arduous labors, he found time to give to the world practical suggestions, now being carried out viz., "Stations all over Uganda," and, "a railway from the coast to the lake."
